BITTER LANGUAGE USED BY BLEASE

count to the people. I was elected to the legislature by New Deal when but a child; I served here in the State senate; I was mayor of Newberry and from this office I went into the governor's chair to help me God, if it is the last word I shall ever speak, I am willing that every act of my private life and my public life shall be held up to the light of day. I don't claim to be a saint. I have been a boy and done those things that boys do. I am a man and I admit I did these things that all men have done, but not one dollar has ever gone into my pocket that I was not willing honestly and justly. There is no one thing I have done that I am not willing for the people of South Carolina to know.

"Whenever you send your committee to Augusta—gutternipes, pimps, political prostitutes—to take the testimony of a man who—Senator, who is a thief and knows it, whom your attorney general knows to be the vilest creature that ever lived in this State, whom does it hurt? It does not hurt me, but the State of South Carolina has a right published to the world that your governor is a thief. Mr. Felder's statements are as false as the hinges that swing the gates of hell and the scoundrelly puppy knows it and that is why he won't come into South Carolina.

Would Meet Felder.

"I will say any man $1,000 who will put Thos. B. Felder two feet on this side of the Savannah river and let me have present. If he is such a good man, such a clean man, why doesn't he come over here?

"Why do you send a legislative committee with old mutton-headed Sullivan of Anderson at the head of it to Augusta to do his nasty, stinking, filthy work? That commission is composed of as dirty and contemptible men as ever disgraced the State since Moses and Chamberlain, your two free-trigger loving governors.

"In law no words justify a blow, but I will be in Columbia Monday and if any member of that commission dare come to my face, I'll tell him something that will make any South Carolinian fight.

"All this you see in the papers from Augusta does not hurt me, though never was a dirtier act performed on any man. But I have got this to say: You need send no challenges in South Carolina, but if any member of that committee meet me in the street Monday and I am told he believes what Felder says, you won't need a duelling law and Charles A. Smith will be my second.

Mr. Smith is lieutenant governor. He would become governor automatically upon the resignation, death or disqualification of the governor. The foregoing sentence concluded the Blanton-Smyth speech of Governor Blease.

Other utterances of the governor, which were unusual for matter or form, or both, were as follows:

"I believe the voice of the people is the voice of God and I was overpowered in my election two years ago. It will be expressed in my reelection August 27."

"They may persecute us. They may vilify us, they may abuse, but my people were of the Red Shirt days of the 80's—my father and both brothers, while Jones' people wore where we could find them."

Then replying to a question, "Is he white?" the governor said:

"I can't tell because he got mixed blood in him and I can't get him to admit it." The governor's reference was to an intimation by the governor at a recent meeting that Jewish blood flowed in Judge Jones' veins.

Five Passes Again.

"I am surprised that Judge Jones should admit that he was one that they was 'bamboozled' with a free pass, for a man that could be bamboozled with a pass could be bamboozled with dollars."

"Did you ever have one?" inquired a man in the crowd

"No," shouted the governor, "and if you say you are a liar. Any man who says I rode on a free pass is an infamous liar."

"The chief apostle of morality, Jones comes here to Rimbero and attacked me at my back, when he knows I couldn't hear him, the coward—that's his mixed blood."

"Ben Abney, my cousin, whom they keep lugging in, is worth $1,000,000 and he was chief counsel of the Southern railway, but he's not any more. He's been promoted."

"I am satisfied," said the governor, "that some of Jones' friends are trying to get for the judge that place with the Southern when Ben Abney leaves. He was shrewd enough, when Jones was chief justice, to employ the young lawyer son, Charlie, who runs a livery stable and a grocery in Lancaster, as a railroad attorney. He would have to make a phone connection through the cats for son, Charlie, with his daddy on the bench."

Col. Bamberg of your town, whom I have the honor to have on my staff," said Blease, "the only colonel that I have never seen fight."

Speaking of the pardon he granted to John Black, former director of the State dispensary, Blease said Black was tried before a "pet judge," Ernest Moore of Lancaster, who knows no more about law than a jay short does about a palm book."

Chief Justice Jones the governor said, "got mad because I knocked the supreme court to a frazzle, that he went home, had his wife bring him a new pair of pants, feathers on his legs and jumped into this race for governor."

Jones Gets Unfilled Hearing.

Judge Jones, after he had fairly compelled a meeting for himself, exhausted and hardly able to make utterance of the gubernatorial office and outlined his ideals of service in that position.

My whole life, private and public," he said, "has been a most searching examination. If you find in it anything unworthy, vote against me. I have not lived the soil of South Carolina."

Mr. Lyon said Mr. Earle came from a high-toned, reputable and respectable family, and he hoped he would not be forced to say that Mr. Felder play campaign methods which ought to be left to such men as Barney Evans.

Should Not Go Down.

Mr. Earle himself he regarded he stated, as a man of honesty and sincerity, yet here Mr. Earle was repeating stories which Barney Evans had related on the stump two years ago. Mr. Earle was a man of character too high to resort to Felder's foul campaigning. He was not going to attack Mr. Earle, but appealed to him to remember his mother and his wife was Earle and to keep himself out of the Barney Evans class. He would not undertake, he said, to comment upon Mr. Earle's personal character. He had not even criticised Mr. Earle's record in office, saying that he expected such criticism by declaring he had always supported and upheld the law upon in his work of repressing and punishing corruption in the State dispensary.

The weapon he showed by citations from the record that Mr. Earle had failed to support him, but at many times when the investigation had just gotten fairly started, Mr. Earle voted to limit the investigation. He said that Mr. Earle thus sought to check the investigation at the time, not five years or seven after he had left office, but within 18 months, just when serious effective work had commenced. Mr. Lyon said he referred to this vote of Mr. Earle's to show what had been the attitude of Mr. Earle upon the very subject of his work. And now Mr. Earle, in order to offset that reply, comes before the people with a personal response accounts that have been in print for several years and which Mr. Earle could have stamp in his ago by Barney Evans. Mr. Earle told in his hand a printed, detailed report, which he had had in the legislature as senator for about three years. If the attorney general had done wrong, as he had shown according to Mr. Earle, and it had taken Mr. Earle three years to find it out with official documents at hand, how long would it probably take Mr. Earle to discover matters of which evidence thus ready provided? Mr. Lyon said it was perfectly true that he went to New York, to Washington and to Cincinnati and other cities at a distance, on important business in connection with the affairs of the State dispensary. The law allowed him his personal expenses on such journeys and necessarily since his salary was only $1,000, less than many a bookkeeper received, and out of that he had to pay for his campaign expenses.

There were calls from the floor of "Lyon, Lyon," even while Messrs Evans and Earle were speaking, and not only was the attorney general cheered and applauded when he began and when he concluded, but at intervals during his address.

A number of person also cheered Evans and considerable applause was given Mr. Earle.

Kaufman's Cure for White Slavery.

Reginald Wright Kaufman in Leslie's

I believe that socalled "white slavery" is the result of poverty. I believe that it can not be cured by treating the symptoms, that it can be cured only by curing the cause. I believe that the cause is economic—that the cause is poverty. I therefore believe that the only way to cure white slavery is to cure poverty. And I know of no cure for poverty save the economic and social system whereunder a living wage shall be guaranteed to all who work, whereunder a person capable of working shall be forced to work, whereunder private property shall be abolished, and the entire means of production and distribution, now owned by the few, shall be owned by the many, whereunder the benefit of all in a word, I know of no cure but socialism.

To Look and Feel Bright in Hot Weather

This is the season when she who would have a rose-leaf complexion, white neck and hands, should turn her thoughts to mercolized wax, the fine friend of the summer girl. Nothing so effectually overcomes the soiling effects of sun and dust and dirt. The wax, with absolute safety, removes discolored, withered or ruin-seed cuticle, bringing forth a brand new skin clear, soft and faultly beautiful. It encourages the pores, removing blackheads and increasing the skin's healthful capacity. An ounce of mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, applied nightly like cold cream, and I washed off mornings will gradually improve the worst complexion

When depressed by the heat and you want to freshen up for the evening bathe the face in a lotion made by dissolving a dram of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel You'll find this more refreshing than ice water, it also smooths out fine lines, affecting even the deper wrinkles.—Adv.

RED RUST-PROOF OATS.

One of the largest and most reliable seed houses in the country writes us, as follows:

"The crop is large and up to this time quality is good. Some light weight oats, but not a considerable amount. Taken as a crop, we think Some stained oats, but none genuinely damaged

"Prices will probably be very attractive from buyers standpoint, being much lower than for weeks and months preceding. However, the farmers of the southern states are pretty well need it badly, as long standing debts call for settlement at once. Because of that these oats are being rushed on the market at unreasonable and unexpected rapidity is presented for the buyer to make early purchases on a basis that can hardly be above very profitable. So without being in the attitude of definitely advising, we nevertheless feel that some investment buying now is worthy of your serious consideration.
