REBUILDING THE WORLD

Work Accomplished by Protestant Medical Missionaries in Non-Christian Countries Vividly Described by Dr. John G. Vaughn—Resting Eyeight to Chinese Carried on Bamboo Couch for Week to Reach Mission.

Special to The State. New York, May 21—Vision was restored last year to the blind eyes of 24,000 men, women and children in non-Christian lands by medical missionaries of the Protestant churches, according to Fred B. Fisher, of the Secretary of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

to reach him. He is called upon to perform difficult operations under primitive conditions. In parts of Africa, for instance, missionaries have to treat a surprising number of natives who have been bitten by snakes and who are not in American health style, but are frequently afflicted with tropical diseases.

Dr. Vaughn formerly a medical missionary in China, and now at the head of the medical missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, paints a striking picture of the vision and work accomplished by the white missionaries in the non-Christian world.

Then comes the wonder of the anesthetic, the sleeping medicine. We hear them talking excitedly among themselves over the fact that we are cutting the patient and he does not feel pain. As a rule, the doctor who recovers consciousness has a clear head and a clear mind.

One of the most interesting of the world's medical progress is the establishment of a string of hospitals in the Malay Peninsula. The Mohammedans are the dominant race in the Malay Peninsula, but they are not averse to modern medicine or surgery.

Dr. Vaughn makes the interesting statement that in the course of his work he has seen the world's greatest medical work done by people who are afflicted with it at any given time than with any other ailment.

eat plenty of good food and rest as much as possible. The white physician and his assistants are not allowed to enter the houses of the natives. The natives are not allowed to enter the houses of the missionaries.

Dr. Vaughn now has charge of the examinations of candidates as medical missionaries for the Methodist board. There is a good reason why they are not allowed to enter the houses of the natives. It is to prevent the spread of disease.
